

Abstract

The present invention provides novel monofunctional polyethylene glycol aldehydes for the pegylation of therapeutically active proteins. The pegylated protein conjugates that are produced, retain a substantial portion of their therapeutic activity and are less 5 immunogenic than the protein from which the conjugate is derived. New syntheses for preparing such aldehydes are described.